I recently came across a great image dealing with figures of speech (see below). The English language is blessed with many, often humorous, figures of speech. Can you find them all?

Talking about figures of speech and the power of language - Poetry is an excellent way to express ideas and emotions through language. We invite our students and families this week to engage in poetry writing.

We encourage you to write your own poem, then memorize it and perform it. Record it on video and share it with us. (You can always select your favorite poem and do the same thing.)

Here are a few tips from Mr. Anthony on how to get started:

If you want some freedom in creating a poem, then why not choose an image (it can be from the internet, a picture of friends, an animal, a location, absolutely anything). Then maybe add a rhyme scheme to follow, something simple like aa bb aa bb, or something more complex.

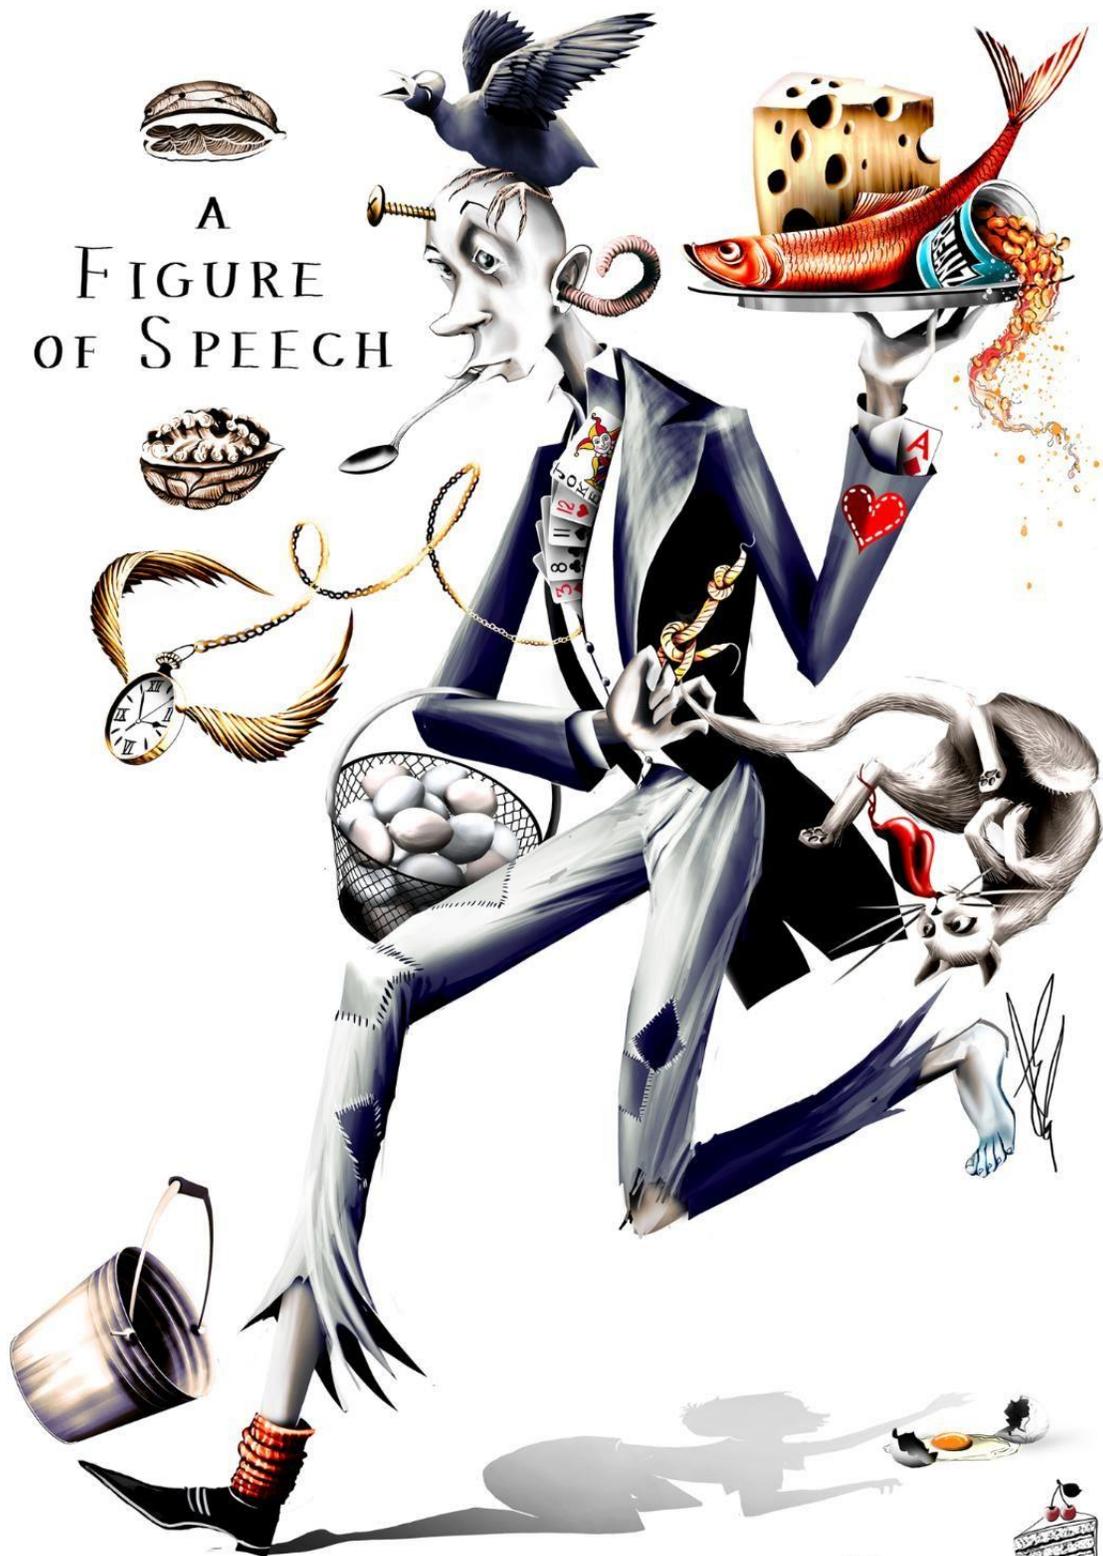

Another idea is to create a fictional character (you could use the funny man below as inspiration). Then write 5 adjectives to describe the character and some facts about the character's life (e.g. where they live, who they live with, what the character is going to be doing in their poem etc). Use this as a base to write a poetic story about the character and his/her life.

Feel free to garnish your poetry with many different figures of speech.

Yours Sincerely,

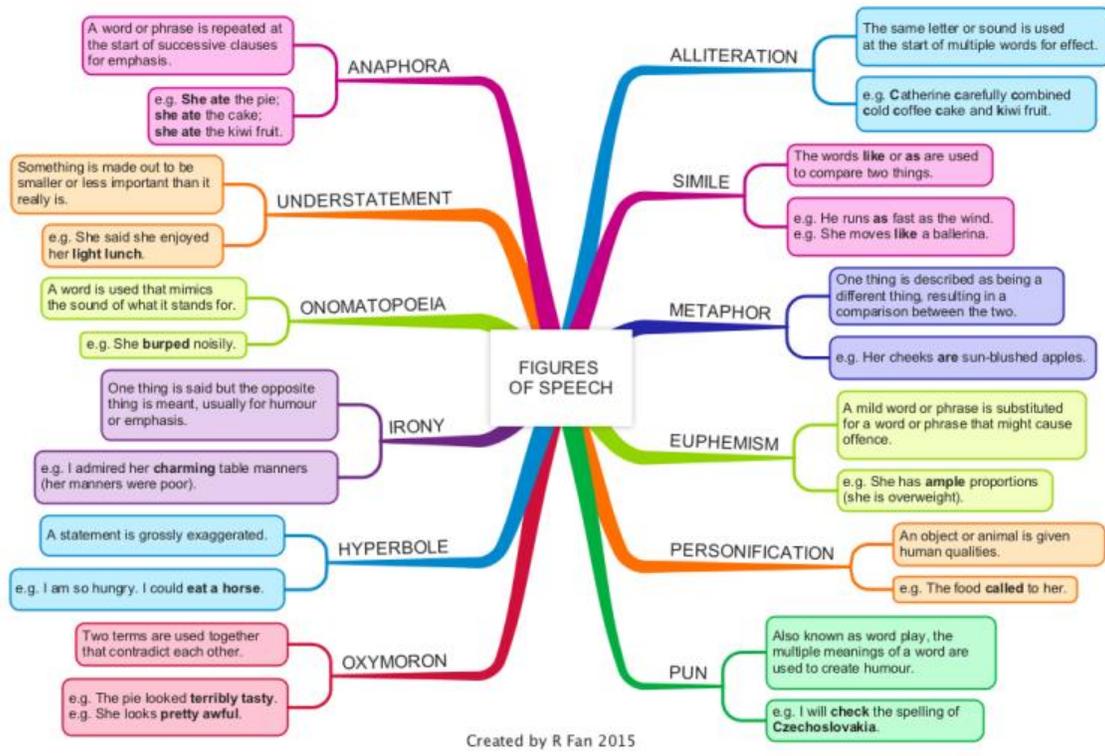

Dr. James W. Pilton
